Dear Department of Justice:

Dear Official: It is most accurate to say that my dismay at the attacks on Microsoft in the form of Anti-Trust prosecution was profound. In America the moral of the day is "take everything you can get," and this time they will "get" it from a company that has given more to the consumer than most. Microsoft had the goal to succeed. Quite frankly, the other companies could not compete because their products were not as favored by the consumer. During my training to become a real estate agent I became appalled that I could not talk to other agents about fees, because that would violate anti-trust. At that time I realized that anyone who excels too much is in danger of being cut down thru anti-trust prosecution. When this happened to Microsoft, I was not surprised, just appalled. I realize that you must operate within the law. It is simply important that you know how the citizens, of which I am one, believe and feel on this subject.

Sincerely,
